Story Text

Benny was a small, brave rabbit.
He lived in a sunny green meadow.
Benny loved hopping and exploring.
He also loved shiny things.

One bright morning, Benny found a red apple.
It lay near Farmer Lily's wooden cart.
The apple looked fresh and sweet.
Benny's tummy gave a tiny rumble.

He looked around the meadow.
No one was near the cart.
The apple smelled delicious and juicy.
Benny picked it up carefully.

His heart beat a little faster.
He knew the apple was not his.
Farmer Lily worked very hard.
She sold apples in the village.

Benny thought about taking one small bite.
"No one will know," he whispered.
Then he remembered his mother's words.
"Honesty makes your heart light."

Benny felt a twist in his tummy.
He had to make a choice.

Decision 1:

Should Benny take a bite of the apple?
Option A: Yes, take one quick bite.
Option B: No, put it back on the cart.

If you chose Option A:
Benny took a small bite.
The apple tasted sweet and crisp.

But his ears drooped at once.
He felt heavy inside his chest.
The apple did not taste as good now.

If you chose Option B:
Benny placed the apple back gently.
He stepped away from the cart.
But he still thought about the apple.
His tummy still felt hungry.

Just then, Farmer Lily returned.
She looked at the apples in her cart.
She noticed one apple was missing.
Or maybe it had a tiny bite.

Farmer Lily sighed softly.
"I work hard for these apples," she said.

Benny's whiskers trembled.
His paws felt wobbly.
He could hop away quickly.
Or he could speak the truth.

His brave heart spoke loudly now.
Being brave means telling the truth.

Decision 2:

Should Benny tell Farmer Lily what happened?

Option A: Yes, tell her the truth.

Option B: No, hop away quietly.

If you chose Option A:
Benny hopped forward slowly.
"I am sorry," he said softly.
"I touched your apple.
I was tempted and took a bite."

Farmer Lily looked surprised.
Then she smiled gently.
"Thank you for telling me," she said.
"Honesty is very brave."
She gave Benny a small apple slice.
"This one is for you," she said kindly.

Benny's heart felt light and warm.
The apple slice tasted sweeter than ever.
He felt proud and strong inside.

If you chose Option B:
Benny hopped away very fast.
He hid behind a tall bush.
His heart thumped loudly.
He did not feel proud or happy.
The meadow did not seem bright anymore.

Later, Benny saw Farmer Lily again.
He felt the heavy feeling return.
He knew running away was wrong.
He hopped back with courage.

"I am sorry," he said bravely.
"I should have told you before."

Farmer Lily nodded kindly.
"Thank you for coming back," she said.
"Honesty fixes mistakes."
She handed him a small apple slice.

Benny's heart felt light at last.
The meadow looked sunny again.

That evening, Benny told his mother everything.
She hugged him tight.
"I am proud of your honesty," she said.

Benny smiled wide.
He learned something important that day.
Being honest may feel hard at first.
But it makes your heart shine bright.

And brave rabbits always choose bright hearts.
